Extracts.

IS IT COME?
Is it come? They said on the banks of the Nile Who looked for the world's long promised day, And saw but the stars of Egypt's fall With the desert's sands and the granite grey.
From the pyramids, temples, and treasure dead, We vainly ask for their wisdom's plan;
They tell of the stars and their day's end—Yet there was hope when that day began.

The Chaldean came with his story long,
That built up Babylon's towers and creed;
And bricks were stamped on the Tigris' shore With signs which our eyes could not read.
From Nineveh's Temple and Nimrod's Tower,
The rule of the old East's empire spread, Circumventing faith and unquenchable power—But still, it is come! the watcher said.

The light of the Persian's worshiped face O'er the ancient bonfires of splendor threw;
And once on the West's sunrise came,
When Greece to her freedom's trust was true.

With dreams to the utmost age true,
With human gods and with golden men, No marvel the far-off seemed near—
To eyes that looked through her legends then.

The Romans conquered and reigned, long, And deeper old Europe's darkness grew As we were aware the God came on—The dawn was leaping, the sixth was low.

The people served in the tower's shade, But were seen when the ruler came;
And we were aware the God came on—
The dawn was leaping, the sixth was low.

Poe and Keats that question caught Above the sea of life's dark fets; He marked with letters the path of thought Through words and words which the earth forgets.

And stately order, and private desire,
And leaders tread our world away;
Yet hearts to that golden promise cleave And still, at times, it is come? they say.

The day of the nation here no trace Of all the sunshine so far, foretold; The embers speak in the teacher's place—This age is weary with work and gold.

And higher hopes and other memories want—On hearts and alters the fire are laid;
But that brave faith hath not lived in vain;
And this is all that our watcher said.

PLEASURES OF VEGETARIANISM.

Hurrah for the knapsack! Who so cheery And so light-hearted as the pedestrian as he Steps along a pretty lane between green hedge-rows, or climbs a bit of mountain road, and watches the village pictures in the valley below? Who so independent and happy, when needing a quiet rest he throws off his burden, and reclines upon some soft slope, or in the deep shadow of the walnut tree that borders the path? Who so careless and free in his actions? The light weight he carries is surely no burden, and astringent and astringent and songs soothe the way, when there are no natural beauties to admire. Who so fresh, so joyous, and so chatty—especially at the start? It is singular, though, that after a few miles there is scarcely so much talking and singing as at first; and the marching perhaps is a little less like a pedestrian movement. A weak point here, or a slight pain there, develops itself, but you are not troubled for all that. Not at all, you are quite after mile, rather silent, and puffing and blowing a little, it is true, but for a while and weary—why, who ever heard of such a thing? There is nothing to fear and no thing to care for, to speak of, saving in warm weather, a mind and body becoming sluggish, a falling in fact, which is as prevalent among pedestrians as it is among German students. It is a singular sickness, known under the name of Bismuth, or bear-fover; and a word respecting it will not be out of place here. The disease is peculiar to the pedestrian. In no other country do you experience it. A hunter, who has gradually done up all the available bodily moisture. This thirst will not be cured with water. It cries out distinctly for beer! and one of its worst symptoms is that the patient passes into a state of great irritation if the beer is drawn with too much heat.
The first mug is swallowed without any effect, and the second is ordered with the injunction to the waiter to bring a third. The waiter—"Liebe Meiden, nur nicht zu viel Schwein!" Should the second dose fail to give instant relief, which will be found an unfailing remedy, so that the ailment is not after all a very serious one, if only promptly and properly treated.—Tramps in the Tyrol.

AUSTRALIAN BUFFALOES.

These animals were first introduced into Melville Island in 1824, when Sir Gordon Dundas was sent by the British Government to form the settlement of Dundas, which was eventually abandoned on account of the fertility of the natives, and the island has ever since been uninhabited by any but these savages. As a slight description of the kind of buffalo found on the island may be interesting to some of your readers, I extract the following from the Port Darwin newspapers—"These animals originally came from Timor. They attain a much larger size than the European one, and are much often lighter in color, and sometimes more The body is shaped somewhat like a sack, there being a rise towards the centre of the back, and a corresponding curve in the belly.
The neck is short and thick, with a slight curve downward instead of being arched, and the head, which is large and heavy, projects from the neck in a nearly horizontal direction, the top of the head being The body is supported by short sturdy legs, terminating in massive but well-formed hoofs. The horse is spreading, extending backwards from the head, so as to be nearly parallel with the neck and back; when the animal is walking or swimming. The eye is small and not unlike that of the elephant, and the large protruding ear is shorter than that of the European one. The skin is of great thickness, and acutely provided with straggling hairs; it has a leathery appearance, like that of the elephant.
The habits of this animal are no singular as its appearance. During the day, when not feeding on the coarse sedge grass which it seems to prefer, it wallows in fresh water swamps, from which it often hurries itself to drink only the head is visible. This habit seems not doubt from the susceptibility of the skin, notwithstanding its great thickness, to the attacks of insects. On land their movements are ungainly in the extreme, their usual pace being a slow deliberate waddle; but when excited they move over the ground at a rapid rate. The thickness of the skin is remarkable, and I have on several occasions hit one with a Westley Richards carbide at twenty yards without the ball penetrating. It is to the thickness of their skin, which renders it impenetrable to wooden arrows, that their rapid increase on the island is chiefly attributable. It is the natives to obtain from sticks that could only lead to their own destruction.
I understand that the Malays and Chinese prefer their skin to the meat itself, and that they have a way of preserving pieces of the skin by boiling it down into cakes, which are dried and will keep for years. It has been all the properties of relative, and it is a great curiosity. We had not been on the island more than an hour when we succeeded in "bagging" three fine buffaloes, and could have easily obtained more if we had wanted them, and on the several occasions that I have visited this splendid island I have always had as much sport as I needed.

HOW DRINKING CAUSES
APOPLEXY.

It is the essential nature of all wine and spirits to produce an increase of blood in the system. The effect of taking a glass of wine or stronger form of alcohol is to send the blood there faster than common, hence the circulation that gives the red face. It increases the activity of the brain; and it works faster, and so does the tongue. But as the blood goes to the brain faster than common, it returns faster, and no special harm results. But suppose a man keeps on drinking, the blood is sent to the brain so fast, in such large quantities, that, in order to make room for it, the arteries have to enlarge themselves; they increase in size, and in doing so they press against the more yielding blood vessels, which carry the blood out of the brain; and the result is that the arteries, which are so elastic, become rigid; but it is not only carried to the arteries of the brain faster than is natural or healthful, but it is prevented from leaving it as fast as usual; hence a double set of causes of death are in operation. Hence, a man may drink enough of brandy or of other spirits in a few hours, or even minutes, to produce a fatal attack of apoplexy. This is literally true.

THE FAMILY ARMS OF THE GOETHS.

We sought out Goethe's house, and here it was my turn to be touched, for I found in the old visitors' book my own name.
My reader may be very much surprised, and I am sure he will be, but I felt that I must not let my heart speak so freely forth when he finds his name on some ancient tourist's register. Old schemes, old routes of pleasure, old friendships that were meant to be perpetual and are now dead—how they start into the memory at sight of one's own autograph, just as if it were the first time the hand was so lively and the foot so firm!
"You have, then, visited Frankfurt before, Mr. Flomming?" said my companion.
"Yes, and so I have visited many other places in the New World and the Old. But it was before I had met you; and, in the words of Laertes, both the worlds I give to negligence, just as if I were a spirit; and in that day when the hand was so lively and the foot so firm!
